

Fighting Loneliness on Remote Teams

by Rachel Montañez

March 22, 2024

Jimena Roquero/Stocksy

Summary. Remote work offers many benefits, but the lack of community – compared to in-person environments – can cause some workers to feel isolated and lonely. These feelings can impact job performance, sometimes... more

Remote work, as many of us know, can be isolating. That isolation often leads to feelings of loneliness, which can cause employees stress and significantly impact their job performance.

Absenteeism attributed to stress and loneliness costs U.S. employers an estimated \$154 billion annually, according to a 2022 article published in the Journal of Organizational Effectiveness: People and Performance. Loneliness and isolation have had such a widespread impact on society over the last five years that public health officials have declared the situation an epidemic. Central to this crisis is a lack of community.

Read more on Remote work or related topics Virtual teams, Inclusion and belonging, Leading teams, Wellness and Managing employees

Partner Center